Druid's Prayer Waltz

DAVSON

Among many types of waltz, that with the slow hymn-like motive and subdued harmonies undoubtedly has its place; the Druid's Prayer being of this order. The tone-quality of this record is exceptionally rich and smooth, making the waltz specially attractive on this account. (Speed 81.)

Very fine cornet solo, the true ring and power of the instrument being combined with a mellow softness and richness of tone that constitutes a triumph of recording. The expressive playing of the soloist, too, will not be overlooked. (Speed 81.)

0219 Students' Songs

One can foresee a considerable demand for this publication. "There is a Tavern in the Town," "The Tarpaulin Jacket," and others of these choruses are known and sung by all, yet not often rendered in such splendid style as they are here by the Coldstreams' Band. At many informal and festive gatherings, this record should be sufficient to set the whole company singing these bright and popular student songs. (Speed 81.)

02225 The Sailor's Grave SULLIVAN

(With Organ and Piano accompaniment.)

About Sullivan's best songs there is certainly a something which merits the appellation of "great." These are not the ballads of a day, but always come fresh and sweet to the ear. The death of a sailor in mid-ocean appeals at once to the imagination, and after the soft opening verses there follows the well-known and magnificent invocation—

"Sleep on, thou mighty dead,
A glorious tomb they've found thee."

It is a song of sustained and ever-increasing power of climax, in the rendering of which Mr. John Harrison shows himself an undoubted master. (Speed 81.)

METCALF

A lovely short song, the deep sentiment of which exactly suits Evan Williams' métier as a singer. With his inimitable rich soft pleading accents, the vocalist is heard at his best in this touching ballad of love in absence. (Speed 81.)

Queen of Connemara

NEEDHAM

Madame Alicia Needham is one of those composers who always has something to say, and the latest example of her powers is unquestionably a very fine song. The voice of Mr. Herbert Brown is of individual quality, the rendering is full of spirit, and in the very fine refrain he achieves a genuine tenderness of expression, a quality always rare and always welcome. The Midshipmite

S. ADAMS

Stephen Adams' career as a song-writer extends over a considerable period of years. The Midshipmite is one of his very earliest songs, and, like "Nancy Lee," was at one time in everybody's mouth. Mr. Thorpe Bates excels in the rendering of popular sea-songs. The verve and gusto with which this is given are inimitable, equalling his previous renderings of "Pinafore" and other sailor songs. The Curfew

MONK-GOULD

Opens in a quiet, reflective strain, descriptive of the close of day. As the song proceeds, considerable variety of expression is shown, leading to the animated finish—a quick dancing movement to the words ;

"O'er the dewy green,
By the glow-worm's light,
Dance the elves of night."

This is rendered in a most artistic manner, being a fine example of Mr. Radford's more finished style of singing. (Speed 82.)

The addition of Mr. Harry Dearth to the list of Gramophone artists is a notable one. He has the happy knack of putting a living personality into every song he sings. His articulation is perfect, and the natural humour he introduces, without any apparent effort, combined with artistic rendition, will undoubtedly create an enormous demand for this splendid record. From the last act of "La Clemenza," an opera upon which Mozart lavished some of his most beautiful music, but which, on account of the unsatisfactory nature of the libretto never succeeded upon the stage. This aria is one of the most elaborate and beautiful of its composer's many fine examples, and opens with the following melodious subject:—

A beautiful opening for woodwind (corni di bassetto) heralds a dramatic section in F minor to the words

The songs of Goring Thomas are always welcome, as being something above the average in quality. "Time's Garden" is a song of resignation, it is rendered with a rich and dignified restraint, an effect heightened by the pleading note of the 'cello. A beautiful and artistic contralto record of much musical interest, very finely reproduced. (Speed 81.)

Air

BACH

Bach's air for the G string is, perhaps, the finest example of a slow movement for a stringed instrument ever written. The slow, broad, sustained notes upon the lowest register of the violin, with the soft moving bass of the accompanist, have an effect of quiet grandeur and dignity rarely met with in music. Miss Parlow's performance is evidence of her exquisite sensibility and refinement, and emphasises the expressive qualities of this fine old air. (Speed 81.)

Seeling Study in E flat minor

Hans Seeling was a native of Prague, where he died in 1862. A clever and successful pianist, he was the composer of a number of brilliant piano pieces, among which were the 12 Concert Studies, of which this is the last. It begins with a rapid series of triplet chords as follows—

Appassionata assai. ff strepitoso.

These rise and fall like a series of waves, a pianist of the calibre of Herr Backhaus, however, finding no difficulty in giving a brilliant account of them. Later on a soft section is developed with a pretty melody in the tenor, charmingly given by the pianist:—

Cantabile con anima.

After this the first part is strengthened and elaborated on repetition, the melody of the middle movement being combined, thus giving increased power and interest to the climax. (Speed 81.)

The Two Grenadiers

SCHUMANN

This is Schumann's most celebrated song. The words by the German poet, Heine, illustrate the Napoleon-worship of the army of the great Emperor. In it the dying Grenadier, heedless of the wife and child he is leaving behind, begs his comrade to carry his corpse home from Russia to France, to bury him there with musket and sabre, so that when Napoleon came riding by he would start up out of the very grave itself to follow once more the army of his Emperor. This startling climax is illustrated by the triumphant use of the 'Marseillaise,' the soft closing chords illustrating the death of the soldier. Mr. Clarence Whitehill, with whose powers opera-goers will be familiar, delivers this song with a grandeur and a dignity of voice that will be a revelation to many. As the song proceeds the style grows more and more dramatic, the singing of the 'Marseillaise' being simply magnificent. An unusually striking and perfect record. (Speed 80.)

Entrance of Butterfly

PUCCINI

The first act of "Madama Butterfly" makes an exceedingly pretty Japanese picture. Here, Pinkerton, in the garden of his new house, awaits the coming of his bride. Butterfly, as she climbs the hill attended by her maidens, sings this lovely song, full of the freshness of youth and the morning of love. It contains one of the chief motives of the opera.

sostenuto. a tempo.

d'a - mor, . . d'a-mor venni al-le so - glie.

o - ve . . s'ac - co - glie.

A beautiful subject, full of the charm of Puccini's style. Few artistes could render this with such a haunting sense of beauty as Geraldine Farrar: the bird-like notes float along in a stream of pure melody, realising one of the most delightful moments of Puccini's opera. (Speed 80.)
